Editor's Letter

Welcome to the latest edition of Britain, My Nation, the bi-monthly magazine published in support of and to publicise British Nationalism.

Despite, in this internet dependent world, the odds being stacked against us in succeeding with the introduction of a hard-copy only magazine, it seems that Britain, My Nation is going from strength to strength. Our subscriber base is increasing regularly and we received a real boost when a top level Nationalist recently took out a subscription. He'll know who he is, so thank you!

The political world is starting to get even more interesting as Prime Minister Starmer and his bunch of third-world class leadership start turning the screw (see 'In The News'). For such apparently intelligent people the government seemingly have little understanding on what makes this country tick and do not, or perhaps they do, realise how much resentment there is in the country of them and what they are doing. We Nationalists can sit here with a wry smile as we know that the worse it gets, the better for us, as those who are sick and tired about the situation and the lack of a credible opposition are migrating to us in numbers.

Further to the above, in a recent discussion with the leader of a relatively new party, the discussion moved onto lost Nationalists i.e. those who were once active party members in the past but had essentially 'gone off the radar'. Britain, My Nation will be devoting a page on this issue soon, but if we could encourage these people to get involved once more, then what a movement we would have! So, where are they? If readers are in touch with anyone who fits this category then give them a nudge and tell them they are needed now, more than ever before, and that the future in Nationalism is, contrary to what they may believe, looking very rosy indeed.

We are very pleased with our latest article in our series 'Introducing…', where we provide a platform for Nationalist personalities to talk about themselves and/or the party they represent, and so welcome Steve Frost, National Secretary of the British Movement. Look out for future editions as we have already lined up several other Nationalist leaders very much look forward to their contributions.

Britain, My Nation will only be available by post on subscription and not via the internet or by email. Articles, letters, newspaper cuttings, and general comments for consideration for inclusion in future editions are welcomed, but please include your name and address if sending items (these will not be published, unless advised otherwise). Please send by email to: - britainmynation@yahoo.com

by post to: - The Editor, Britain, My Nation, 10 Washpool, SWINDON, Wiltshire, SN5 3PN

We are planning on publishing Britain, My Nation for some time to come, but we can only do so with support from Nationalists within our community. We are truly grateful for the support and encouragement we have received to date but there is always more we can do, so please make sure you mention Britain, My Nation to your friends, family and political comrades and perhaps request a couple of extra copies that you can distribute as samples. Thank you all once more.

In the News - 1

On Monday 29th July the country was shocked, stunned and angered by the MASS STABBING OF CHILDREN at a Southport dance studio. Three children were killed and another eight children and two adults were injured. Despite social media rumours that a Muslim immigrant was responsible, the attacker was later identified, by the police via the media, as 'Axel Rudakabana, a 17 year old British citizen, born in Cardiff to Rwandan parents'. As a result of the previous misinformation protests took place in Southport and a mosque was damaged. The protests escalated throughout the country and the media reported on these as being instigated by the 'far-right' and the English Defence League, despite the fact that the former were actually angry local people and the latter haven't been active for around ten years! Prime Minister Keir Starmer made the situation worse by making a televised press appearance in Downing Street condemning the unrest and pledging that those found guilty of offences will be fast-tracked through the courts, this was quickly followed by the Assistant Chief of the Metropolitan Police, Matt Twist, stating that "We'll now arrest people more quickly at protests". Such statements have resulted in the situation being made worse as angry people became angrier, with the public recalling the riots and unlawful behaviour instigated by, and in support of, the Black lives Matter movement and how the government and others 'took the knee' in support, rather than 'arresting people more quickly' or fast-tracking them through the courts (also see the RIOTS IN HAREHILLS item 'In The News' in Britain, My Nation, Edition 4). As a consequence of this disorder over 1,000 people were arrested, with nearly 600 being charged with many being convicted and given harsh prison sentences, many for minor 'crimes'.

With Britain's prisons reaching breaking point, Starmer gave approval for the EARLY RELEASE OF THOUSANDS OF PRISONERS. Generally, prisoners are considered for early release after serving 50% of their sentences but this was reduced to 40% to ease the overcrowding. Prisoners were released at the beginning of September and presumably made space for those convicted as above. It has since come to light that at least 37 prisoners were released by mistake and several have since committed further crimes and returned to prison.

The annual Caribbean carnival event, which began in 1966, took place over the August Bank Holiday weekend in part of Kensington, London. According to media reports THE NOTTING HILL CARNIVAL is attended by over a million people during its two day duration and each year there are an increasing number of calls for it to be banned due to the problems associated with the event. This year police reported 249 arrests had been made, including 40 for the possession of offensive weapons and 16 assaults on emergency workers, together with a number of sexual assaults, drug crimes, theft and so on.

At the time of writing our Labour government have been in power for less than 3 months and it seems unable to make any decisions that are for the good of the British people. Amongst policies announced so far the government are to stop the PENSIONER'S FUEL ALLOWANCE for those not receiving certain benefit payments, resulting in much concern that many vulnerable people will struggle with the cold this winter. Rumours also abound that the PENSIONER'S BUS PASS will be stopped resulting in our older people no longer having the means to travel further than they can walk, in many cases this not being very far at all, so essentially committing them to being housebound. It is also likely that the single occupier COUNCIL TAX DISCOUNT will be discontinued at the next budget. It is increasingly apparent that our government would rather penalise its own people than reduce or stop the never-ending funding for foreign aid and foreign wars.

The BANNING OF SMOKING OUTSIDE PUBS is also on the cards. This is likely to result in the rate of pub closures increasing more rapidly than before as those who like a drink often like a smoke and so the joy they take in having a smoke with a pint will no longer be possible. It has been suggested that there may be a more sinister reason for this, as the pub has often been seen as where revolutions have been planned!

In the News – 2

Considering his track record so far, there can be little confidence in Starmer's announcement that he plans to REFORM THE NHS IN 10 YEARS. He has warned that it must 'reform or die' and although it would seem in principle to be a good idea there must be some doubt that he has any more of an idea about how to do that than anyone else has had. His 4-part plan includes sections on No Money Without Reform, Neighbourhood Health, Digitising The Health Service and Tackling Waiting Lists. Reaction to the reforms from healthcare providers and unions has generally been supportive, although some warned of the "sheer scale of the challenge" that faces the new government and, as said, with his track record to date, his plan is unlikely to go well.

The problems for Starmer continue as it has come to light through the Westminster Accounts project that he has declared MORE GIFTS AND FREEBIES than any other MP, with a total of over £100,000 received in gifts, benefits and hospitality since December 2019. This total is two and a half times more than the next highest freeloading MP. A large proportion of the donations was received from the Premier League with almost £40,000 in football match tickets. In his attempt to defend this, Starmer suggested that because the gift was for tickets to a private box, it was the only way he could attend and be happy that his security wasn't compromised. Yet Prince William doesn't seem to have the same concerns when he attends matches. If Starmer was that worried perhaps he should stay at home and watch the match on the television. The biggest donor of gifts and hospitality is Labour peer Waheed Alli who gave the equivalent of over £39,000, from which £20,000 was for accommodation that has been reported as being for Starmer's son to have the privacy to study for his GCSE's away from the pressures of living in Downing Street. Alli has also provided 'work clothing' worth over £16,000 and multiple pairs of glasses worth approximately £2,500.

The whole Starmer saga is like the gift that keeps giving, as at the recent Labour Party conference he made a heartfelt speech regarding the conflict in the Middle East, so heartfelt that he demanded that "… Hamas release the sausages …" when he meant to say "hostages". Needless to say that as a result of this gaff, social media is having a field day at Starmer's expense.

When things seemingly could not get any worse for Starmer it has been suggested that he has taken out a super injunction to prevent newspapers publishing a dark secret about him that has just come to light and that as a result of all of the above his cabinet is in turmoil and his support has dropped through the floor with predictions that his tenancy in Downing Street will become untenable and his resignation will be tendered before Christmas.

The last words on Starmer should go to ex-Labour MP for Canterbury, ROSIE DUFFIELD whose letter, which is in the public domain, informing him of her resignation from the Labour Party has caused a storm. In it she says "As Prime Minister, your managerial and technocratic approach, and lack of basic politics and political instincts, have come crashing down on us as a party…"

Ending on a more positive piece of news we see that the CAMPAIGN FOR AN IMMIGRATION REFERENDUM (https://immigrationreferendum.org) have taken to the streets during September. This cross-party campaign seeks to give the British people a vote on immigration. On consecutive weekends activists were out on Britain's streets asking members of the public for their views on immigration and on how they felt the government were dealing with the problem. Unsurprisingly the overwhelming response was that no-one is listening and they have had enough! So if you haven't done so already please sign the petition and share with others to make this happen. It happened with Brexit so it can happen with the Immigration Referendum. Readers won't need convincing on the importance of this but if a reminder is required please note that the Office of National Statistics, in a recent report states – National population projections: 2021–based interim says "Over the next 15 years between mid-2021 and mid-2036, the UK population is projected to grow by 6.6 million people (9.9%) from an estimated 67.0 million to 73.7 million; this includes … net international migration of 6.1 million people". We owe it to our children and grand-children to work together to stop this.

Countryside Matters by O.R.

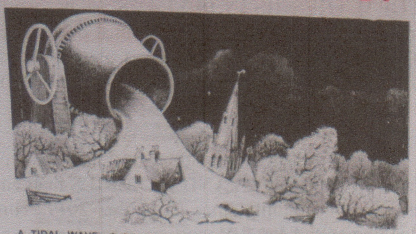
For anyone that has travelled around the countryside, or for that matter, the periphery of urban areas, they will not have missed seeing the proliferation of new housing being built. No-one seems able to convincingly explain who is buying all of these new properties, particularly when we are all allegedly struggling to make ends meet. Yet they do rapidly sell out! The new housing estates vary in size, but here in North Wiltshire there are at least three of around 1,000 plus houses that are under construction, as well as numerous other smaller estates. On the basis of this, Wiltshire itself must have tens of thousands of new houses at various build stages and so across the country

The vast majority of these have been built on what was green-belt farming land and not on brown field sites, many of which are actually available. It does not seem logical for the green-belt to be built upon when we have derelict warehouses and factories which could easily and more cheaply be converted into homes, but they remain empty falling into an ever-increasing state of disrepair. All of the new building is good news for the building industry but it surely is not sustainable. As if this wasn't bad enough we also have thousands of acres of solar panel farms also being built on land previously used for agriculture purposes. As we all know, our population is increasing due to the arrival of a never-ending stream of illegal immigrants, and the birth rates of those already here. Consequently our ability to provide food (and water) for that population is rapidly decreasing requiring a need to import more and more from abroad. This is no way to run a progressive and successful nation.

It may be that this BNP leaflet from the late 1990's – 'STOP THE BUILDING!' provides some of the answers as to why there is such an increase in the number of houses being built. (editor – sorry about the less than wonderful reproduction – a magnifying glass may help!) White Flight may seem to be one answer as to why this is happening but it does not address the fact that the homes our people are leaving in our urban centres are most likely to be more expensive than those in rural areas, so it still begs the question – who is buying these?

Unfortunately there seems to be no definitive answer to this question, but what is known is that, without the huge influx of those who should not be here, this would not be happening and our nation and the land required to sustain ourselves, would not be disappearing under this concrete blanket. There has to be a better way to deal with the situation, but it seems that our governments do not have the political will to do what is necessary and as we all know - that is to stop immigration and return those who should not be here to where they come from!

STOP THE BUILDING!



A TIDAL WAVE of development is wrecking hundreds of villages and market towns. A flood of concrete is destroying thousands of acres of prime farmland, beauty spots and the habitats of rare and endangered wildlife.

What is planned around here is only a small part of the big picture. Up to 1,000 square miles of virgin countryside are to be bulldozed to make way for an official target of 4.4 million new homes by the year 2016.

In fact, it's going to be even worse than that! The 4.4 million figure was decided on by the Conservatives before the last general election, but Labour Government planners are now working on a revised figure of 5.5 million new houses. That means that even more of our heritage is going to be destroyed. In the words of Labour planning minister, Richard Caborn: "The green belt is up for grabs."

The worst thing of all is that the resulting destruction of rural communities, wildlife and farmland is totally unnecessary. There are hundreds of thousands of acres of derelict land in and around Britain's cities and big towns. If this land were redeveloped, there would be plenty of new homes, and none of the extra traffic jams and pollution which will be caused by people commuting from new dormitory towns into the cities.

But reclaiming urban wasteland is less profitable than bulldozing our countryside, so the politicians — councillors and MPs alike — get big back-handers from the developers and construction companies in return for allowing them to concrete over fields, woods and villages.

That's why the only way to stop the building is to throw out the old politicians.

If you agree that it's time to take action to preserve Britain's countryside, then you've got to help to build a completely new political force, which is pledged to put the interests of the British people as a whole before those of greedy developers or bought-and-paid-for politicians.

THE CEMENT-MIXER'S MOTOR

WITH AN average of fewer than 1.8 children per couple, the numbers of the native British population are actually falling. So why do we need all the extra houses?

The official story is that it is because of the increasing number of people who live alone, particularly as a result of the rising divorce rate. But if there is a shortage of housing for those people, the answer is to build large numbers of affordable one-bedroom flats on reclaimed land in the cities and big towns where they live at present, not to build expensive three-bedroomed houses all over what's left of our countryside!

No! The real reason for the building blight is that Britain's population is growing because of continued mass immigration, and because of the high birthrate of the immigrant communities already here. Not only do all those extra people have to be housed, but 'white flight' from cities dominated by foreign cultures and attitudes is the big, unspoken, reason why so many people want to move out to new developments in rural areas.

These facts are well-known by the planners and politicians, but multi-culturalism is a sacred cow these days. They'd rather pour concrete all over rural Britain than stop immigration. The Economic & Social Research Council has admitted that:-

"Annual net additions to the population (including some but not all asylum claimants) from international migration rose from an estimated 35,000 in 1992 to 109,000 in 1995 — a net addition of 647,000 people in the decade. This is a substantial contribution to population and household growth (immigration is partly behind the famous increase of projected households to 4.4 million)."

When you consider that the figures above don't even include all asylum-seekers, let alone any of the huge number of illegal immigrants, you'll begin to see why we can't possibly save our countryside from the cement-mixers without dealing with the problem of immigration!

How Do We Save Our Decaying Country?

In our last edition we discussed the need to invest in our children to ensure that they have an adequate grounding for adult life, through a proper and appropriate education that teaches them the life skills to cope, as well as the requirement for respecting others.

It was only in 2015 that the law was changed making it compulsory for young people to remain in some form of training or education until their 18th birthday. This is a double-edged sword having both positive and negative repercussions. The negative side is that it instils in the young person the belief that they can rely on the state because they are essentially not yet adults needing to take responsibility for their own livelihoods. They have no need to get out into the real world to seek employment nor any need to contribute or take any control in respect of their own welfare. The positive side is that the young person is given more time to mature and develop whilst also continuing with the learning process as well as training in skills that will hold them in good stead for their subsequent move into the adult world.

It is difficult to decide either way on this issue, particularly when looking back in relatively recent history, to when 16 year olds took up arms to fight for our country, as well as, with parental consent, being able to marry and potentially have children. The current Labour government are even now talking about allowing 16 year olds the opportunity to vote in elections, presumably relying on their lack of maturity and minimal life experience meaning they view what the Labour party represents with rose-tinted glasses. It is only after reaching maturity and living in the real world with all its challenges that they will understand that the Labour dream is not what it appears to be! Of course, there are those who never wake up to this, but experience often shows these people fall into the champagne socialist category or live away from areas that suffer under the Labour and woke yoke.

To avoid unnecessary complication we will, for the purposes of this article, work on the basis that this situation is for the best.

As said, it was not too long ago that children could leave school at 16 and set foot in the real world, obtaining work and beginning that long path through life, with all the responsibilities that adults take on, despite not being necessarily mature enough to cope with what life throws up. By ensuring they are given another two years before they need to take this step provides them with the opportunity to ensure they are very much ready.

For those aged 16 – 18 we should provide several options to occupy and prepare them for the future. The first of these would be to remain in school, an option that has always been available, allowing students to continue with their studies but at a higher level, moving from GCSE to A level standard, or to improve on any results that they may have at GCSE level that weren't as good as they wanted or needed them to be. Similarly the same route could be taken but in a college environment rather than school. A third option would be to train at college in a vocational subject so they would be ready to take up the selected profession on leaving.

Moving away from the traditional educational environment, a further option would be to take up an apprenticeship with an employer, training in a skill that would make them valuable in the eyes of a potential employer, be it the one they trained with or another.

A final option and perhaps most radical would be a form of National Service. Although traditionally this is seen in terms of a military service, it could also be working in the NHS or with social services. Any form of National Service would not only provide training towards a good career and one where staff are very much in demand, as in the NHS, but would also give the young person a sense of duty and respect, qualities that are sadly missing today.

On reaching 18 a young person will move forward into the real world meeting all of the challenges this entails. This means that the infrastructure of the nation needs to be adequate and appropriate for not only survival but also to enable our population to thrive and work together in making this nation great again.

Introducing – Steve Frost, National Secretary, British Movement

Revolution From Below. (This article incorporates some of the ideas put forward by British Movement in issue 120 of 'Heritage and Destiny' magazine).

British Movement was first established in the summer of 1968 by the leading British National Socialist Colin Jordan. The Movement continued under the leadership of Michael McLaughlin from 1975 until 1983 and then underwent re-organisation and restructuring under the direction of the 1984 Committee. British Movement, under its full title as the British National Socialist Movement has continued as an active political organisation up to the present day.

British Movement operates as an extra-parliamentary organisation and decided to opt out of standing in elections during its re-organisation in the 1984/85 period. The British electoral system is a rigged game and the current system will not permit openly racial Nationalist or National Socialist parties to gain political influence, much less take power.

British Movement believes that what is needed is a combination of a long term and consistent, national propaganda campaign, together with community based activities and periodic high profile activities on the streets. Building a grassroots movement through persistent street level propaganda campaigns and community politics is the extra-parliamentary route favoured by BM.

Given the current state of Britain and the corrosive effect of multiculturalism and 'woke' culture, there is a need for an ideological challenge to the forces corrupting and destroying our nation. The necessary steps include propaganda campaigns that build a national recognition and understanding of the slogan 'Fourteen Words'.

Propaganda campaigns must employ every available format of messaging ranging from traditional leafleting, poster actions, painted slogans and to on-line social media output, podcasts and websites.

One important strategy adopted by British Movement is the 'White Towns Project'. This strategy avoids the obvious difficulties of campaigning in heavily colonised urban areas and targets White towns and neighbourhoods for propaganda distribution and messaging. This tactic avoids confrontation with hostile non-whites and also reduces the likelihood of intervention by politically motivated police.

British Movement has for a number of years operated a project called, 'Looking After Our Own', which generates fund raising and support for Movement members and supporters and for identified people within neighbourhoods. 'Looking After Our Own' seeks to provide financial or material support where the state fails and has achieved recognition in a number of communities. This is small-scale at present but creates the foundations, the building blocks, of the folk community and the grassroots movement.

Although not possible to cover this here in detail the British Movement strategy also includes 'Strength Through Joy' events and activity. In recent years 'STJ' has organised and provided hiking activities, coastal camping holidays, music events, a range of outdoor activities, and children's Christmas events.

The road ahead is a long one, there are no short cuts, British Nationalism has to think forward in terms of decades and focus on a distant future. Whichever arm of British Nationalism gains ground it must be supported and equally must find room for other arms of the broader Nationalist movement including British National Socialism.

DEFEATISM IS NOT AN OPTION - FOURTEEN WORDS!

Steve Frost. National Secretary – British Movement.

(Next month – Introducing Dr. James Lewthwaite – Chairman of the British Democrats).

Which Nationalist Party? (1 of 4)

The political conference season is upon us and the major political parties will probably be carrying on as if all is well in the world, whereas the smaller parties will actually be addressing the issues that matter to the public in general. We provide details of Nationalist party conferences that we have, bearing in mind some will be taking place as we go to print. Additionally we will be looking at selected items from each party's policy on health, with this brief insight falling coincidentally at the time Prime Minister Starmer has announced a 10 year plan to save the NHS (see In The News).

British Democratic Party

The British Democrats have announced that their 2024 conference will take place in Essex on Saturday 2nd November.

Extracts from the BDP health policy includes a statement that they are completely committed to the National Health Service but are concerned that it has become international, both in its service providers and also patients. They say that medical practitioners and nurses are often looted from Third World countries that can ill afford to train them and that it is utterly immoral for the developed world to recruit health care staff from poor countries, when those workers are needed to care for their own people. The BDP believes that we need to help poor countries train their brightest and best to become medical practitioners and nurses, with distance learning packages managed by volunteers – especially by those with ties to the countries in question. They say that the beneficiaries of this help would be contractually bound to devote their careers to the care of their own people. They say that the NHS was established on the basis that it would provide care for the British people and not the rest of the world and so health tourists must not be allowed to use NHS services. The BDP continues with the view that Britain has talented and conscientious people within our own populations who can easily be educated and trained to provide the full range of medical services. The party also states that the GMC has revealed that doctors trained abroad are disproportionately more likely to be struck off or suspended for misconduct or incompetence. The party believes the administrative costs of the health service are disproportionately high and so there must be a shift of funding towards those providing health services directly to the patient.

Britain First

The Britain First website reports on their 'Summer Conference' which took place on Saturday 31st August in Birmingham. The report says that 'the turnout was amazing and (the conference was) a great success' and that uplifting speeches were given by Paul Golding, party leader, Ashlea Simon, Alex Merola and Nick Scanlon. An amendment to the party constitution was voted on and a dozen 'Elite Activist' plaques were awarded with the conference ending with the singing of 'Land Of Hope And Glory' and 'Jerusalem'. The report ends with 'If ever there was a need for a radical, strong nationalist movement like Britain First, it is now. We are fighting for a future for our children and grand-children, and we are going to be victorious in the end'.

A selection of items from the BF NHS policy, include – keeping the NHS free at the point of need and the introduction of an 'NHS Protection Bill' prohibiting the privatisation of any part of the NHS, guaranteeing public ownership and that it will ensure the NHS is run by the appropriate people and not politicians, with action taken to combat excessive bureaucracy removing unnecessary managers and boosting numbers, training and pay of doctors, nurses and dentists to stop the import of those from the Third World. BF would implement a national scheme to promote healthy ways of living and so tackle the root causes of the poor health of the nation. BF would provide free prescriptions and dental care for all British citizens aged over 65 and under 18, and for those on disability benefits, but would charge others per prescription slip rather than per item. They would boost mental health service provision, whilst services facilitating transgender ideology would cease. BF would stop foreign health tourism and overseas guests would pay for NHS services. The party would also ensure that societal medical lockdowns for diseases with high survival rates would be banned, as would vaccination mandates. Vaccination passports would be prohibited as would punishments for those who refuse vaccinations.

British Freedom Party

No information can be readily found regarding a conference nor a specific policy on health.

British Movement

With the unique position of the BM with its strategy to not contest elections, a list of party policies, as we have become accustomed to seeing from other parties, is not specifically available.

Consequently we have assumed that the 25-point National Socialist plan, which includes for the state to ensure it does the best for its' folk, would cover as a health policy.

British National Party

With the BNP having zero credibility with no influence nor impact on the Nationalist movement, as well as no activist base, a party conference is an impossibility.

Despite the above, it does still retain sensible policies and so on that basis we will continue to produce extracts from these as we deem relevant. With regards health, the party believes the NHS must remain publicly funded and be provided free at the point of use. The BNP would replace 100,000 NHS bureaucrats, and replace them with doctors, nurses and dentists (that it would train and pay appropriately with the looting of those from abroad being stopped), it would fill the current multi-billion pound gap in the health service with part of the £12.5 billion we save on foreign aid and end the scandal of 'health tourism'. The party would end NHS privatisation and GP's would be freed up from all work that is not related specifically to the health of patients. They would also end external contracting-out of cleaning services and hospital car parking charges. The BNP would place an increased emphasis on healthy living with a greater understanding of sickness prevention through physical exercise, a healthier environment, improved diets and early diagnosis.

English Democrats

The ED autumn party conference, followed by a dinner will be held near Nottingham, on Saturday 5th October, this will be preceded by a black tie event on Friday the 4th. The cost for the event has a starting price of £40 for the Conference itself, rising by various increments to £350 for the 'double gold conference, conference dinner and gold dinner'. It is believed this will be a joint conference with the ailing UKIP.

The ED's health policy states they are committed to making the NHS an efficient organisation providing a high-quality service for all citizens and they will give priority to a patient's treatment based on medical need, not artificial management targets. The ED's will ensure NHS services are not freely available to non-nationals. The party will revise the Care in the Community policy in order to protect the mentally ill and those considered to be a significant risk either to themselves or to the public, will remain in secure care.

Heritage Party

The Heritage Party conference will take place in Reading on Saturday 28th September.

The Heritage Party policy document is entitled 'Health and Wholesomeness', and includes the need for healthcare to be rebuilt from its roots with patients prioritised above managers, bureaucrats or pharmaceutical corporation profits. They say that we should train enough medical professionals to work in the healthcare sector to avoid reliance on migrant healthcare workers and that nurses should, rather than specialise, offer general practical care spending more time on wards. The party would drastically reduce GP and hospital waiting lists with funding provided to achieve this. The party would ensure that the NHS was only available for UK citizens with others being required to take out private medical insurance before they come to the UK. The party would empower citizens to live healthy and wholesome lifestyles thereby avoiding chronic conditions that make them dependent on drugs. The party would uphold the need for medical autonomy and informed consent and never again be breached as it was in the covid period and ensure there is never any coercion, threat, penalty or punishment for choosing not to take a particular medicine or vaccination. They also say that mental health treatment will empower citizens to experience varied, healthy lifestyles and avoid the negative messaging of media conglomerates.

Homeland Party

The Homeland Party conference took place on Saturday 28th September in the East Midlands with tickets priced at £20, and as promised it was unlike any other that Nationalism has seen, with speakers including, Manuel Schreiber from the German AfD, a party with a presence in state and European Parliaments, Robert Grajny from the Polish Konfederacja party (Confederation Liberty and Independence) and Gareth Falls from the Northern Ireland People's Party. Also attending were members of other Nationalist parties including Reform UK, the British Democrats, the English Democrats and the SDP (Social Democratic Party) as well as non-aligned individuals, such as Steve Laws, who has vociferously campaigned against immigration.

There is currently no detailed party policy on health but it can be assumed that their web-site statement, such that they are returning to the bedrock foundations of nation and community with a focus on ensuring that political decisions are made to promote our people's well-being … with a vision rooted in quality care, as well as the aim to enact policies that ensure the safety and security necessary for families, is a cover-all

National Front

The NF seem to have reached a hiatus with no current information available on social media or the internet and so no details regarding a conference nor a policy on health can be determined.

National Housing Party UK

No details can be found regarding a party conference.

The NHPUK policy on health states that Christianity is a positive guide for life which produces healthy life styles. The party says it would ensure the NHS is fully nationalised with elements of pay-as-you-go for certain conditions, so if a patient has an unhealthy lifestyle because they take drugs, are obese, smoke or drink excessively and this leads to the need for medical treatment over and above that for a healthy person then a charge would be incurred. The party would ensure that life threatening natural illnesses would be covered by the NHS free of charge, OAPs and people with disabilities would also be treated free of charge. The party would nationalise pharmaceutical companies so excessive profits could not be made on the back of people being ill.

National Rebirth Party

The party has recently published the first issue of a newspaper called 'Rise Britannia', which is intended to be issued on a monthly basis. Regional meetings are also currently taking place but no details can be found regarding a conference.

The party's stance on health includes a statement that the health of the British people must be a priority of the British state as a nation can only be healthy when its people are made healthy. In their list of 25 demands, Demand 12 says - We demand that British citizens shall continue to have access to a state-funded NHS, and the state should routinely promote and fund programmes which encourage a physically and mentally healthy lifestyle. They add that foreigners or visitors will be required to pay for the use of public health services.

New British Union

No information can be found regarding a conference.

An extensive statement entitled 'Health Care Policy' can be found on the party website including that a sound health policy must be developed that incorporates the NHS although recognising that change is required such that it will be fully nationalised and all private finance interests will cease. They state that doctors and nurses will deal with health issues and professional managers will manage all else. The NBU will see that financial investment will be uniform throughout the nation and a full pay grade review will take place to ensure that all staff feel valued and their skills are recognised which will also encourage young people to involve themselves in the profession. The party proposes an identity card system be introduced to combat non-nationals abusing the NHS and those without such will be denied treatment. The NBU believe that British people should be encouraged to take responsibility for their own health through a healthy lifestyle although this will be non-prescriptive. They will also abolish prescription charges.

Patria

No details can be found regarding a conference.

Patria are fully committed to the restoration of a first class National Health Service, publicly owned and managed, funded from general taxation and free to British citizens at the point of delivery. They will greatly expand training and recruitment of British, rather than foreign, and those health professionals and foreign staff employed by the NHS shall be required to demonstrate an adequate command of the English language. Patria will end all Private Finance Initiatives (PFI), with compensation paid where appropriate. The party will increase the pay of dentists to make NHS work a more attractive option for them and prescription and dental charges will be abolished in England as will hospital car parking charges.

Which Nationalist Party? (4 of 4)

Patriotic Alternative

No details are yet to hand regarding a party conference although these have taken place in October in the last couple of years – however it is reported that the party is having difficulty in finding high profile speakers for it.

PA policy includes a recognition that the NHS should always remain publicly owned and run, but with sweeping management reforms to ensure the service is improved and frontline care is maximised with a recognition that more medical staff need to be trained and properly remunerated. The party will stop health tourism and patients requiring interpreters will be expected to fund these themselves. PA will end the employment of staff who do not speak English fluently.

Populist Party

No details are available regarding a party conference.

The party policy on health simply states that they support a National Health Service and oppose charges for prescriptions.

Reclaim Party

No details are available regarding a party conference.

The Reclaim Party would introduce a Swiss model of healthcare, whereby those of low incomes would have all the health expenses paid for by the state, free at the point of use. The party would help nurses into the profession by ending the requirement for nurses to have a degree and to avoid financial waste NHS managers would be required to procure items using best value for money principles. Reclaim believe that bodily autonomy is paramount so there will be no enforced medical procedures and no-one will be required to choose between their livelihood and an injection.

Reform UK

Perhaps not surprisingly Reform UK have recently appointed a new party chairman, businessman, Muhamad Ziauddin Yusuf, who is British born of Sri Lankan parents and who identifies as a "British Muslim patriot". He succeeded Richard Tice in July despite being a paid member of the Conservative party until August, and gave Reform UK a major donation in June.

The party conference entitled 'Live and Ready!' took place at the NEC Birmingham on Friday 20th and Saturday 21st of September and was a ticketed event for members only, with prices ranging from £20 to £1,025 (yes, really!). Day 1 saw speeches by the party leadership and MP's, followed by a 'spectacular evening party filled with music, dancing and drinks!' Day 2 was a networking event with a view to consolidating a 'grassroots infrastructure'.

The health policy of Reform UK includes a recognition of the need for major NHS reforms to improve results and revert to zero waiting list times with frontline staff paying zero basic rate tax for 3 years. The party will obtain additional health provision by utilising independent providers and for patients purchasing private healthcare insurance, a 20% tax relief will be applied thereby helping with capacity and relieving pressure on the NHS. The party will introduce a voucher scheme so that patients who are unable to see a GP within 3 days, a consultant within 3 weeks, or have an operation within 9 weeks, will be able to have private treatment instead. Reform UK will cut waste and unnecessary managers, will ensure operating theatres remain open at weekends and charge those who do not attend scheduled appointments. The party will cut A&E waiting times through a 'Pharmacy First, GP Second, A&E Last' campaign.

UKIP

Despite having resigned as party leader due to ill health, photographs of a rather healthy-looking, bikini-clad Lois Perry are circulating on the internet along with reports of an alleged dalliance with Nigel Farage and with the party turmoil continuing, no details of a conference are available (although there are rumours that they will be holding a joint conference with the English Democrats.)

The party manifesto is currently being revised but what can be gleaned of a health policy includes that the party put local communities first and oppose health tourism and cuts to front-line NHS doctors, nurses, and dentists. They also propose to change National Insurance to a National Health Insurance to properly fund the NHS separately from other public expenditure.

The Best of Spearhead Magazine – August 1975 (1)

Britain, My Nation continues our regular feature by way of recognising, in our view, the best Nationalist magazine that the movement has ever seen, as produced by main editor John Tyndall. We can only reproduce a few of the 20 pages from each issue, but from those that we do we can see the quality of the magazine, together with the strength of the Nationalist movement as it once was, with the hope that it will rise again in the future.

This time we look at pages from Spearhead issue number 86 from August 1975, nearly 50 years ago and take note of the message on the cover which is very relevant today as we continue to kowtow to minorities. Additionally the other 2 pages highlight the professionalism and commitment of Nationalists at that time, a time when the National Front was the party to belong to. Sadly the decay in society, with the lack of self-respect and personal discipline, as encouraged by government and the media, make it harder for us to stand up in the way that we did then. However, the Nationalists of today, who are prepared to fight for our cause, are to be applauded all the more for doing so in the face of such opposition.

To see the strength and discipline of the movement as it was, can only give the Nationalist movement today the encouragement to continue our struggle, as it is a struggle that we must and will win.

WHY PEOPLE SHOULD VOTE N.F.

Speech made by Ruth Robinson at Eltham Green School on Saturday 21st June, 1975, during West Woolwich By-Election Campaign.

We have witnessed the decline of this nation over the last 30 years from one of the most powerful and most respected countries in the world to the sorry state we find it in today.

For 30 years we have had two leaders – General Apathy and Major Despair. We have been led blindfold along an obstacle course to National Ruin and self-degradation.

We have sunk so low that a tinpot dictator such as General Amin can not only tweak the lion's tail but proceed to stuff it down the lion's throat. We have the spectacle of emissaries from the Queen of England grovelling low and licking the boots of a thug and murderer whose corrupt regime is only held together by the strings of international finance and mealy mouthed multi-racial minded Europeans.

At the whim of a mad dictator, we agreed to take tens of thousands of his unwanted Asians.

At the whim of another bloodstained dictator by the name of Kenyatta, we are taking his unwanted Asians.

And the same story from Tanzania.

And all lest we be condemned at the bar of 'World Opinion'.

Successive British Governments have only supported pro-communist or anti-white regimes.

Have you noticed the hypocrisy in foreign affairs? This myopic bar of world opinion sees only what it wants to see and condemns only what suits it to condemn.

Successive governments have alienated our friends in the Commonwealth, made enemies of our friends while our enemies without and within grow stronger daily.

All this has been done in your name – but they never consult you – only insult you by coming back and asking for your vote.

Of course we know who is behind it all and why, and one day they will get their just desserts.

Meanwhile, here at home, they have managed to spread a sleeping sickness across the population. They have changed the face of this country beyond recognition, and never asked or consulted us – the British people, tax- and ratepayers who sustain them in their lofty towers. For years they've been telling us we live in a democracy, and some people still believe it. The truth is that we live in a feudal dictatorship where the two big parties take it in turns to mismanage, thus giving the illusion of choice, whilst leading us into the blind alley of bankruptcy and a left-wing totalitarian state. We have travelled so far along this road that what was the patriotic centre is now termed 'extreme right' and the rabid left is now the moderate centre. And still people seem unaware that the politicians have squandered our heritage, are threatening our present and have mortgaged our future and our children's future.

And while they have been busy denigrating this Country abroad, let's look at their record at home. What a long list of unmitigated failure! They have failed to house the people of this Country, and indeed in some cases local councils are unaware that local people need housing, as they have scoured Asia and the Caribbean in their search for tenants.

It is doubtful if they have increased the housing stock at all in spite of vast rebuilding programmes. We have witnessed the destruction of street upon street of perfectly good houses. Whole communities have been uprooted and dispersed, and now we are reaping the results in baby battering and nervous troubles on these new estates. Look at the little streets of London; in Battersea, Balham and Wandsworth, and Catford and Lewisham and Eltham and Woolwich. Streets of houses built without government interference and council bureaucracy, where families could live happily and children play in their own garden, where people knew their neighbours and were ready to help out in time of trouble; where aunts and uncles and cousins and friends lived just along the street or round the corner. Compare this living community that used to be with the vast grey, soulless, concrete blocks where pensioners can lie dead and unnoticed for months on end. Concrete blocks built not to house people but to win awards and make money for large building concerns and corrupt politicians.

No wonder there is vandalism on these new estates. People were not meant to be mere units to be accommodated in the smallest possible space, like battery hens, impersonal row upon impersonal row stretching ever upwards like sore fingers upon the skyline.

We have the tentacles of government creeping and tightening their stranglehold over every facet of daily life. They are taking more and more decisions for people and sapping the will of people to be responsible for themselves and their families. They want us all living in a council flat, working for the government so they know where we are and what we're up to. Now with talk of removing the tax relief on mortgage interest they will soon achieve their aim. We must encourage people, wherever possible, to own their own homes. This gives a pride in surroundings, a stake in the country and security for the future.

We have witnessed the run down of industry in the south-east and on Thameside. Jobs and job opportunities have been lost at an alarming rate, and if the trend continues London will become Jarrow on Thames in the 1980's. This is part of the drift of industry out of this country, part of the scheme of the multi-national corporations and international finance who move capital and labour around at will. We know they owe no allegiance to anyone or anything except their bank balances, and now in England, once the powerhouse of the world, every damn thing you pick up is made abroad in some Godforsaken Country you didn't know existed.

So it should come as no surprise to read that the unemployment figures are the highest in June since the war. Ironically, in the same day the Minister of State, Alex Lyon, proudly announced that he is allowing more immigrants than ever into this Country. Have we all gone stark raving mad?

Where are they going to live and what are they going to do?

And now there are plans in the pipeline for further curtailing our freedom. Did you hear on the radio on Tuesday our moderate liberal friend, David Steel, member for a Scottish constituency where a blackman is something from a geography lesson and an immigrant a person moving in from a neighbouring village. He is now lecturing us on the necessity to 'improve and strengthen' the Race Relations Act. He is seriously proposing that all firms be given a quota – according to the census returns of the area in which they are – of ethnic groups they must employ. It matters not, apparently, that when needing skilled workers, design draughtsmen and engineers, firms, in order to win government contracts, must employ non-English speaking drawers of water and hewers of wood from Bangladesh and Pakistan. Thus will the wheels of British industry start to turn; thus will our raging inflation be assuaged and thus will the unemployment problem be solved in the shape of a whole new breed of nosey-parker civil servant, government-inspired Gestapo, spending countless hours and miles of paper checking that British firms are employing foreign labour.

Thus far have we sunk into the mire of multi-racialism and apathy that such an outrageous suggestion is met without comment. What has happened to the British people that they meekly accept this Government by decree and by busybodies? There is a sickness of despair hanging over this Country and the only people who will dispel it is the National Front.

The truth is that neither the Labour nor Conservative parties are in a position to put this country right. They have sold our birthright to the international cosmopolitan moneylenders and in return they dictate the paths our governments will follow. Successive conservative and labour governments have created inflation by increasing the money supply and by borrowing abroad at high interest rates which you and I are having to pay back. They now blame wage awards which are not in themselves inflationary as most of the money goes straight back to the government in the form of taxation. Wage awards are the result of inflation.

Their whole record is one of failure and mismanagement, change for the sake of change. Confuse and demoralize the people and then you can do as you damn well please with them. They've changed our currency so we don't know how much we're spending; they've changed our measurements so we don't know how much we're buying and they've changed the county boundaries so we don't know where we live any more. Everything that was good and right for people has gone in the interests of internationalism. All our values have been stood on their head. Everything that instinct tells us is right they tell us is wrong. And then they come along and call us apathetic. I do not believe the British people are apathetic, they're confused and demoralised.

And now the old tired parties come along and ask for our votes so they can lead us further along the road to ruin and serfdom.

Let us have none of it.

Let us tell them loudly and clearly that the British people no longer believe their lies that the National Front is 'extremist' – they are the true extremists – look at the extreme changes they have made.

Don't waste your vote on the old tired parties.

Now is the time to stand up and be counted by voting for the National Front – the only party capable of putting the GREAT back in BRITAIN.

ENFIELD: A MODEL BRANCH

IF ANY branch of the National Front is to be selected as a model for other branches to be recommended to follow, it is Enfield Branch, which over the last few years has had a superb record of responsible and efficient management.

Enfield lies on the Northern fringe of the Greater London area and the development of the NF Branch there has always been closely bound up with the development of the party over North London and Middlesex.

The Branch was formed in May 1969, and has made steady progress since that date, becoming a permanent part of the political scene in the area.

The fact that it has 'stayed the course' so well over the years is due its having for most of that time had the blessing of first class branch leadership, surrounded by a really dedicated team of active workers.

During the earlier part of the branch's history, its leading figure was Kenneth Robinson, who performed superb service for the branch during his period of office as Chairman. When Ken was compelled to spend less time on branch work due to the demands of his job, his place was taken by David Bruce. Dave has since then maintained the very high standards set by his predecessor. He is an absolute dynamo of activity and highly popular and respected by his colleagues. He stood as a candidate for the Edmonton constituency in both the February and October elections of 1974 and obtained 1,765 votes and 1,895 votes in these elections respectively – a good performance for an NF candidate in the type of area concerned.

In both elections the Enfield Branch made a very strong representation, contesting three seats each time: Edmonton, Enfield North and Southgate.

The ability of the branch to contest these three seats on each occasion has been due very largely to its extremely good fund-raising apparatus, commonly acknowledged as the best in the whole party. The main credit for this must go to Treasurer John Smith, one of the branch's longest serving officials. The Branch is always 'fund-raising conscious'. There is nothing magical in its achievements, nor does it possess any special number of well-to-do members; it merely does what all other branches are urged to do but so often do not do. It makes monthly branch meetings attractive and interesting so that there are usually good attendances. It organises other special fund-raising activities, such as jumble sales, etc. It has a fine record for meeting its debts. Although the largest purchaser of Spearhead of all NF branches, it is never slow in paying its bills. It regularly dispenses 400 copies every month by means of a highly organised system of distribution, which enables it constantly to keep touch, not only with its inner circle of about 70 members, but an outer circle of around 230 supporters.

DAVID BRUCE
Praise due for high standards

It has maintained a consistently high standard in the public meetings it has held, particularly in the February and October elections of 1974. Not only have the meetings been well advertised and attended but they have been superbly organised from the point of view of decor – making a really big impression on all those who have attended them.

Apart from those mentioned, other members who have made an especially valuable contribution to the progress of the Branch have been Bruce Pell, Richard Prince and Roy Burton. Messrs. Pell and Burton have also been parliamentary candidates.

To David Bruce, however, must go the greatest praise for the high standards maintained by the branch in recent times. Every party has its super-extroverts, line-shooters and glory-seekers, whose self-sought prominence is so often in inverse contrast to their actual achievements. Dave Bruce is the exact opposite of these, never seeking the limelight but always being eager to lay stress on what others have done rather on what he has done. Not one to push himself for honours, he has quietly got on with the task of building one of the finest NF branches in all Britain. He and his colleagues are typical of the great number of unsung party activists who let their works speak for themselves.

Belated Obituary: Rita Buckley

Recently it has been drawn to our attention from several quarters that we failed to publish an obituary and tribute to Mrs. Rita Buckley, of Huddersfield National Front, who died last October. One reader in particular commented that this was an appalling omission on our part in view of Mrs. Buckley's dedicated work for the NF.

On checking, we find that this is in fact correct, and we cannot but agree that the omission was indeed appalling.

What happened was that publication of Spearhead was disrupted somewhat during the last months of last year due to the October General Election. There was an October issue, which had gone to press just before the news of Mrs. Buckley's death was known. There was then no issue printed until January of this year, by which time the news was nearly three months old. Nevertheless, a tribute should have been printed even at that late date. The Editor can only plead in explanation of failure to do this that a great many other problems were occupying him at the time, and somehow the due tribute was never published. We deeply regret this error, for there can be few National Front members as deserving of such a tribute as Rita Buckley.

Rita joined the NF in its very early days in the 1960s and was involved in the very early development of the NF branch in Huddersfield, Yorks. Huddersfield was in those days possibly the strongest and best run branch in the country. Later it was the misfortune of the branch to have had several of its most important active workers and officials leave the area, and its strength declined between 1970 and 1972.

It was at this time that Rita Buckley was pressed into taking over the position of Chairman of the branch. She had never sought that position but she tackled it with all the dedication she could summon. Between 1972 and 1974 she did the work of ten active members in reviving the branch and placing it in a position in which it could contest two seats in the October 1974 General Election.

It was as that election approached that she was taken seriously ill. Our Editor visited her during a tour of Yorkshire made as part of the election campaign, and was dismayed to see how much weight she had lost. Nevertheless, there was still at that time some hope that she would recover. It was not to be, however, and shortly afterwards she died.

Rita Buckley was much loved by everyone who knew her, and there was certainly no-one who made greater personal sacrifices on the NF's behalf than she. She leaves a husband, Joe, who has also been a staunch worker for the party over the years.

Freedom of Information Act 2000

In this issue we begin a series of articles looking at the Freedom of Information Act 2000 (the FOIA). The FOIA is an Act of Parliament that is intended to allow the public a right to access information held by public authorities, a right that did not exist before. The Act was implemented as a result of a manifesto commitment by the Labour Party in the 1997 general election with the full provisions of the Act coming into force in 2005.

Initially the Act was the responsibility of the Lord Chancellor's Department (now the Ministry of Justice), but is now the responsibility of the Cabinet Office and the operation of the Act is overseen by the Information Commissioner at the Information Commissioner's Office, which also oversees the Data Protection Act. The ICO has a budget of around £60 million and a staff of over 500.

Any person or organisation is able to request information under the Act and there is no special format in which any request is submitted. Applicants also do not need to mention the Act when requesting information nor do they have to provide a reason.

When requesting information from a public authority, that authority has a duty to provide a response as to whether or not it holds the information and if it does then it must provide it accordingly. The authority also has a duty to assist individuals making requests to ensure that they frame their requests appropriately.

There are numerous exemptions however, with some requests having absolute bars to disclosure and some having qualifications such that the authority can decide whether the public interest in disclosing the information outweighs the public interest in maintaining the exemption. If a request is rejected the applicant can appeal to the ICO and the Government has the power to override disclosure.

Back in 2006 whilst with the British National Party, the Britain, My Nation editor, worked with the now sadly departed Tom Linden, on a project to seek information from public authorities that would relate to party policy issues and also highlight matters that needed to be in the public domain. The aim was to then write a monthly piece in the BNP publication 'Voice of Freedom' by way of an exposé by our Freedom of Information Department.

A great deal of information was obtained which was very useful in Nationalist circles and some of this, although now dated, will appear in subsequent issues of this magazine.

Recently there has been a worrying turn of events such that a cynical observer might assume the government / public authorities are now realising that with their support for uncontrolled immigration, for example, the release of certain information may prove to be their undoing. One example of this is the recent request to the Home Office seeking details of the cost of furnishing asylum seeker flats, a fairly sensitive issue, but not one that should fall into the exemption category, or so one might think. However, the Home Office declined to release the information and after this decision was appealed against, it was upheld by the Information Commissioner because it was deemed 'too sensitive' for release and could put the 'asylum seekers' at risk! This can be translated to being that the cost to the tax-payer is excessive and the Home Office and government are worried that public outrage at this expense would be problematical for them. Additionally, in early September, several government departments have made certain announcements that beg the question as to what they might have to hide and why they are so afraid to release information. The Department of Work and Pensions have stopped publishing data on welfare claims by nationality, HM Revenue and Customs have stopped publishing tax paid and tax credits by nationality, the Home Office will not answer questions on the immigration status of prisoners despite still collecting it, and they have stopped collecting nationality or immigration status data on those who are arrested. So what is going on?

Similarly, recent requests by the editor have either received no response or an obstructive response, such that it seems that there has been a deliberate attempt to frustrate those seeking to obtain information to the extent that the request is abandoned. This turn of events is quite worrying and we will touch on this in future issues as well as looking at those requests that have been made and the responses to them.

A Time In History

This regular feature lists some events in British history which took place on dates during the months covered by this publication.

October

1st 1870 – The postcard is officially introduced, together with a halfpenny postage stamp.

4th 1914 – The first German bomb falls on London.

14th 1066 – Battle of Hastings; the English lose the battle partly because they leave their strong position on the crest of a ridge, and partly because they are exhausted by the earlier Battle of Stamford Bridge and the long march south.

19th 1216 – King John dies unexpectedly at Newark, of a fever, and is succeeded by Henry III.

25th 1760 – George II dies suddenly at 8am., aged 76. He is succeeded by his grandson, George III.

26th 899 – Alfred the Great dies and is succeeded by Edward the Elder, his son, as King of Wessex.

29th 1618 – Sir Walter Raleigh, explorer, adventurer and courtier is executed at Whitehall, ostensibly for treason, but in fact for attacking Spaniards in South America.

29th 1954 – Sir Winston Churchill celebrates his 80th birthday. He is presented by both Houses of Parliament, with a portrait by Graham Sutherland; he dislikes it intensely, and Lady Churchill later destroys it.

November

1st 1848 – W.H. Smith opens their first railway bookstall at Euston Station.

5th 1605 – The Gunpowder Plot. Failing to gain religious toleration from James, Catholics plan to destroy King and Parliament; the plot fails when 36 barrels of gunpowder are discovered in the cellars of the Houses of Parliament. This is the last major Catholic conspiracy. Some of the conspirators are killed at Holbeach House; others, including Guy Fawkes, are captured and tortured.

16th 1272 – Henry III dies at Westminster, succeeded by his eldest son, Edward I. Edward is in Sicily at the time of his father's death, and stays abroad until August 1274.

16th 1896 – Sir Oswald Mosley, leader of the Fascist movement in Britain is born in London.

22nd 1718 – Edward Teach, the English pirate known as 'Blackbeard' is killed off the coast of North Carolina.

22nd 1808 – The pioneer travel agent Thomas Cook is born at Melbourne in Derbyshire.

26th 1972 – The Race Relations Act comes into force; from now on employers may not discriminate on grounds of colour.

27th 1582 – William Shakespeare marries Anne Hathaway at the age of 18.

Dear Robert

Thought this photo might interest you as I know that you were born and bred in the town in which I reside. I took the photo in the relatively new Tesco store on the outskirts of town and was thoroughly annoyed and surprised at the fact it was there. For those who do not know, Calne is (or was) a small market town in North Wiltshire with a population of approximately 20,000 people (Editor – up from around 7,000 when I was born!). On the Wikipedia site there is mention of religious sites in the town, but it may surprise readers that there is no mosque, contrary to what the photo might lead you to believe. In fact, it would surprise me if there were enough Muslims in the town to fill a dinghy! This is again a case of kow-towing to minorities and of course Tesco customers will be paying for this ridiculous nonsense. I will certainly keep an eye on the situation and let you know if and when further displays occur in celebration of all other religious groups. I suggest that you don't hold open a space in your letters column in anticipation of this! Love the magazine – keep up the good work!

Yours sincerely, PB, Calne, Wiltshire.

Dear Robert

The mass immigration both legal and illegal imposed on Britain for the past 30 years has destroyed our social cohesion and security and made the white working class feel extremely angry, alienated and ignored by the Westminster political class. The reality of that is massively hitting home this summer. It has been building up for a long time and Southport was the straw that broke the camel's back, regardless of who the perpetrator was. I'm not condoning or encouraging rioting or attacking the police, but there was a certain inevitability about what has come to pass over the past few days, and in truth I've been expecting it for some years now. It's already been happening across the Irish Sea for some time now and has now spread to the UK. The politicians can only impose ruinous and dangerous policies such as dispersing undocumented male illegal immigrants into hotels and guest houses without warning the local community and allowing Muslim rape gangs to violate and molest English children unimpeded by the police until the host nation finally says enough and takes matters into their own hands. Unfortunately a minority have taken this to extremes by attacking hotels and mosques, but the blame for all of this ultimately lies with successive governments whose multicultural and mass immigration chickens are now coming home to roost. I'd urge all of our fellow patriotic and nationally minded British brothers and sisters to always protest peacefully and with pride, as that will make far more powerful a statement than wanton violence, as throwing bricks, looting and setting fires just plays into the hands of our opponents on the left and in the mainstream media.

Yours sincerely, Paul Sheehan, Coventry.

The Supplement
Issue number 186
August 2024
The dawning of a new era in British politics
Five Reform UK MPs elected and a new Labour administration now running the country. Civil unrest on the streets, and the introduction of two tier policing. Never has British politics been so dramatic and so very scary all at the same time.

The Supplement

Supporting nationalism in Coventry/Warwickshire for over 20 years.
